■■ The Torchbearer's Checklist

What to do when someone you love is suffering silently

■ Don’t ask first — be present first

→ Presence speaks before questions ever can.

■ Stop offering advice

→ Unless they ask, advice adds pressure, not help.

■ Validate, don’t fix

→ Say: “That sounds heavy. I’m here.” Don’t say: “Try yoga” or “Be grateful.”

■ Be willing to feel awkward or powerless

→ That’s where true empathy begins.

■ Stay even after they smile

→ A smile can be survival, not recovery.

■ Educate yourself quietly

→ Learn about what they’re going through. Don’t make them teach you.

■ Return consistently without expectation

→ Healing doesn’t happen on your timeline.

■ Trust their truth even if it doesn’t make sense to you

→ Their haunted house isn’t yours to understand fully — only to respect.

■■ Final Torchbearer's Checklist

■ Show Up Without a Script – your presence is powerful.
■ Step into Their Shoes – feel, don’t just observe.
■ Listen Without Needing to Reply – hold space for silence.
■ Validate Over and Over – it takes time.
■ Learn About Their Struggles – self-educate as an act of love.
■■ Be the Light, Not the Fixer – don’t force healing, support it.
■Stay Anchored – your consistency builds safety.
■ Don’t Leave the Haunted House – even when it’s uncomfortable.
❤■ Remind Them They're Not a Burden – and mean it.
■ Offer Empathy, Not Expectation – it’s not about what you would do.